The Daily Standard.
Saturday, May 27, 1871.

The Washington Treaty.

The terms of the treaty as agreed upon by the Joint High Commission for the settlement of matters in dispute between the governments of Great Britain and the United States, have been received by the people of Canada with a feeling of disappointment bordering on disgust. And we do not wonder at it. A more one-sided affair, it would be impossible to conceive. It proposes that the Canadians shall relinquish everything, while the Americans give nothing that is worth holding. It is but a repetition of the same system of bullying diplomacy on the part of the British which gave Maine on the Atlantic seaboard and Oregon and Washington Territory on the Pacific to the United States, in the face of the strongest evidence that they had no legitimate claim to either the one or the other. Had Canada not been represented on that Commission in the person of Sir John A. Macdonald, we should not have been so much surprised at the result of its labors; but what influence could have been brought to bear upon that gentleman to induce him to acquiesce in an arrangement so prejudicial to the interests of his own country, and which he must have been fully aware would be indignantly rejected by the Canadian people, appears almost beyond conception. As well might the Commissioners have agreed to hand over the Maritime Provinces entire to the Government at Washington, as to accord the privilege to American fishermen of the unrestricted right to fish in British waters, and cure their fish on British soil, without receiving in return for so important a concession such commercial advantages from the United States for the citizens of the Dominion as would be a full equivalent therefor. For any such concession, however, you may seek in vain in the terms of the treaty agreed upon by the representatives of the two Powers. True, the Americans agree that British fishermen may use their coasts and waters within certain prescribed limits, and also have free access to American markets for the sale of their fish, as a compensation for the free use of their fisheries and the right to compete with them for the sale of their wares in Canadian markets; but the concession is worse than useless for Canadians, from the fact that they do not require the use of the American fisheries, and that the right to fish in British waters and sell in British ports far outweighs any advantage that British fishermen will ever derive from the privilege of selling in American markets. It seems that the British Commissioners themselves were conscious that the conditions of the treaty as regards the fisheries were vastly in favor of the Americans, and hence procured the insertion of a clause in the treaty providing for the payment in money, by the United States, of whatever sum, if any, the Commissioners, to whom the matter may be referred, shall determine is a fair compensation for the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under the 18th article of the treaty. The Americans, of course, deny that the treaty gives them any advantage over their neighbors, relying upon their usual good luck in negotiating with John Bull to get clear of paying a single dime in money. Then, with reference to the navigation of the river St. Lawrence, it seems that the advantage to the Americans greatly preponderates over the concession made to the Canadians of the free use of the St. Clair falls and canal and the free navigation of Lake Michigan. When the Canadians shall have completed the Sault Ste. Marie and Georgian Bay Canals, which we understand to be under contract by the Dominion Government, the Canadians will be practically independent of the Americans in the matter of the navigation of the St. Clair Falls and Lake Michigan, a fact well known to the American Commissioners, and hence the concessions under this head are as nothing compared with the advantages which the Americans will gain by the free use forever of the river St. Lawrence. So far as the other rivers mentioned in the treaty are concerned, they are at present of little commercial importance, their actual whereabouts being very imperfectly understood. The subject of a reciprocity treaty of trade and commerce between the two countries is not once referred to, and as a consequence the result of the negotiations are of no moment to British Columbia, except in so far as this colony will share in a general way as a Province of the Dominion in whatever affects the welfare and prosperity of the Dominion as a whole. True, so far as the settlement of British Columbia is more intimately interested than any of the other Provinces; and the reference of the subject to the Emperor of Germany for arbitration, and whose decision thereupon shall finally and forever decide the issue, will doubtless meet the approval of the people of this country, who will rely upon the justice of the referee and the justice of their claim for a satisfactory solution of the question. Judging by the tone of our Canadian exchanges in their comments upon the treaty as a whole, we anticipate its rejection as well by the Dominion Commons as by the local Legislatures of all the Provinces concerned; and should the Imperial Government attempt to force such an obnoxious measure upon the people of Canada, it is not unlikely that a feeling will be aroused throughout the Dominion that will seriously mar the cordial relationship existing between the two countries, if it did not lead to their early separation.
